A FASHION CABLE Newly Arrived from Paris

And Its Translation In the Wanamaker Fashion Salons

Paris, February 10, 1920. "Jenny shows" (so runs the cable) "tailored suits with very short jackets. Many worn with pleated skirts; much serge is used---"

In the Suit Salons are two models that represent both the fine and the less expensive interpretation of this mode. The first is a three-piece suit of fine serge with a short. beautifully tailored Eton jacket worn with a finely accordion pleated skirt. A hodice of midnight blue taffeta heavily embroidered by hand in old blue and black and tied in the back with a sash girdle is worn under the coat. Price $195.

Another Suit

of fine serge has a justabove - hip - length straight coat, embroidered with black silk, worn with an accordion pleated skirt. Price $79.50.

The cable continues: "For afternoon frocks, taffeta is used in quantities; also black satins. White organdie trimming is much favored. Many skirts are composed of three flounces, often finely pleated. Louis XV. influence shown in evening gowns.

"Long waists and draped girdles very much in vogue. Madeleine and Madeleine favor very long lines, and draped girdles below waistline, finishing in huge bows In the Gown Salons are many interpretations of the modes mentioned to see how very closely they do follow the whims of the couturiers. For instance, the frocks of black satin of the long-waisted and draped girdle type are so numerous as to give almost an embarrassment of choice. One of black satin brocade, with little short cap sleeves figured with white, and with an edging of the favored white organdie applied in little points. Price $98.00.

Accordion pleated skirts, both in the form of many ruffles and unbroken of line. are to be seen on cloth, taffeta and satin frocks. Semievening gowns of Georgette crepe make the most of many small and finely pleated frills. One of tomato Elizabeth crepe is particularly lovely-with its six-ruffle skirt and tiny ruffles on the sleeves; $195.

Embroidered Organdie or organdie combined with real filet lace and worn over frilled and puffed black taffeta characterizes two frocks that are among the smartest in the collection. Both of these frocks have the Louis XV. inclination to be bouffant over the hips. Price $185 and $195.
